TERM: Two years

MEMBERS: AR constables must live in the townships in which they are elected

PURPOSE: Many areas of Arkansas are rural, and there are a lot of square miles for law enforcement to cover. Many sheriff's offices and police departments don't have the funding for large departments. That's where reserve officers and constables come in. There are four rungs to the law-enforcement ladder: the State Police, county sheriff's departments, township district constables and municipal police departments. The primary responsibility of the constable is to the residents of the township and county where they serve.
